CONCLUSION :

Rehabilitating Marawi will entail changing the pervasive narratives in its society through spatial and political responses. The insurgent-led siege was simply a spark which ignited the kindling of land dispossession, rido (clan wars), and extreme poverty. It is an irony because right beside the city is a unique natural resource that - if maximized for all its economic, cultural and even spiritual value - can catalyze development and harmony not just for Marawi, but for the entire region. Lake Lanao is a key to unlock opportunities and serve as anchor for community identity and relationships.

There is already a glimpse of what Maranao harmony can look like, especially when a community is committed to a vision. The main campus of Mindanao State University is about 3 kilometers from the Most Affected Area. Since its establishment in 1961, it is the only university directly charged by the government to advance the cause of national unity and actively pursue integration through education, particularly of the Moros, Lumads and Christians of Mindanao. Students saw bombs drop on the city from the golf course in the campus. And despite the conflict, the MSU campus produced the topnotcher of the Social Worker Licensure Examination in 2017, while two other MSU graduates placed 6th and 7th.

Bangon Marawi, although it is mainly a spatial response, carefully considers the social needs of a post-conflict society and orients it towards healing. Most of the city's layout is kept as it was in order to provide its residents with a semblance of their old home. The MAA's road network will be refitted with better infrastructure, giving everyone access to electricity, communications, clean water and sanitation. Making sure that everyone has access to basic services is just the starting point for addressing poverty and inequality. Economic capacity is increased with a larger public market and port facilities. Social Welfare is nurtured through the barangay centers, schools, and an additional hospital. Lastly, social cohesion can be renewed and improved with the addition of public spaces that connect with local business and celebrate Lake Lanao - the fountain of Maranao life and culture.

- ▶ Today, Marawi City like a golden phoenix continue to soar with the support of PBBM through the Marawi Compensation Board (MCB), appointment of Secretary Nasser Pangandaman as Presidential Adviser on Marawi Rehabilitation, Presidential Directive No. PBBM-2024-1192-1194 dated 01 October 2024, continuing support of the Provincial Government and the broad initiatives initiated and implemented by the City Government of Marawi towards sustaining the efforts provided by BANGON MARAWI towards a New and More Vibrant Islamic City of Marawi.
